POETRY.

The Old Woman.

As if life had beat her down;
There is nothing much to see
In her smile or frown.
With her frayed-out market basket
In her bony hand.
Is she anything—I ask it— One could understand ?

There perhaps is this:
She was once a bride, they say,
And received the nuptial klas
On wondrous day
But her lips, could they have been
Ever red and sweet?
Lives there any who has seen
Hers with others meet?

Mother she was, too;
Eur her children all have left her.
What we left for her to do?
Life has given, and bereft her.
There is something terrible
In that stiff droop of her head, s if all the graves were full. And one lived but to be dead, Wrapt in mystery—

Mystery of age and woes,
Hobbling slow and painfully,
Down the street she goes.
Doubling she could hear,
Near I drew with cheestful stir,
Gently said, "Good morning dear!"
And, O God, the smile of her! Wrapt in mystery

Requiem for a Young Soldier.

Peace tonight, heroic spirit! Pain is overpast.
All the strife with life is ended;
You may rest at last.

The devotion that, amazing, Welled from out the deep Of your being, no more needed, Quiet you may sleep;

Sleep, who, giving all for others, Pattled till the victory nigh You, too, toll and heart-break over, Had the right to die!

We may guard the grave that holds As a shrine of Truth Dighted by the pure devotion of your radiant youth.

We you died for, may forget you! will have no care, content, tonight are sleeping-Painless, dreamless, there Sent in by EASTER LILY.

A WORD FROM AUNT MARY.

Dear Social Corner Friends: This seautiful morning I cannot resist the temptation to chat with you all a few I was very much interested in Hill-side's letter, How to Overcome Jolts. I, too, had read the article in Today's Magazine and been helped by it. A number of years ago I listened to the remarks of a man who had just leard a speaker who intended to change his views, and also the one to whom he was speaking. He said when he was aware that anyone was saying words to annoy or perplex him he never ruffled his feathers but let the words slide off like drops of water from a duck's back. That remark has been a great help to me. If you ruffle your feathers to catch every unkind criticism that unthinking people may sond your me. send your way you will have many sad hours. We may not be able to icep sad thoughts from coming to us, but just try to think of some good things that we have had in the past or of some happy event that may happen in the future and just smile.
